

Chemistry Club

The Student Affiliate of the American Chemical Society (SAACS), also known on campus as the Chemistry Club, is a College supported organization. The SAACS is the College's only science-related club and students in all disciplines are encouraged to join. Professor Annamaria Fulep is the club's academic advisor. The officers of the club are elected annually by the membership. The club meets on campus on a bi-monthly basis during the late afternoon; the date and time are determined by the members and advertised by postings throughout the campus.

There are no dues and fundraising consists of bake-sales, safety goggle rentals, Chemistry Week items for sale and other activities which the members recommend. The highlight of the club's activities is its annual trip to the ACS Analytical Conference. The bi-monthly meetings are used not only for administrative functions but also to bring in speakers to assist the members with resume writing, expose them to the variety of careers and employment opportunities available, etc.
